

april

11

30 or 40 feet across. The roof would average about 12 feet high but it was irregular in height, at the place where I was then standing the roof was about 35 feet high & on the East side of the raise there was a stream of water formation, about 8 feet wide streaming down, I was then about out of hearing of my companion & I returned to him without any trouble to speak of. We both went into the place that I had discovered & lit a small red fire in the room so that we could see it by a bright light. I then ^{went} down in the East end of the room and carved the following inscription on a lime stone boulder:

Joseph Duhmich,
&
A. E. Mac Donald
discovered this room on the 19th day of March 1891

in block chambers
shook with red.

South west entrance
the embankment

We then concluded to start for daylight but met before we got to the Chamber of Frost, we found a hole that we wanted to explore, we climbed up about 30 feet but found nothing but hard climbing. When we got to the chamber at first I thought that I would explore the passage leading North-East of the room, I climbed up about 50 or 60 feet and found some curious popcorn work but the passage got too small for further exploration until it was opened. We got out of the cave at 4:00 P.M. & spent the evening at Capt. A. M. Willards.